“Friendship is a voluntary commitment formed between two or more people. It begins in the heart and grows stronger through shared values, trust, and respect. These qualities are nurtured through communication, commitment, and—most importantly—time. True friendship enables us to see beyond what our eyes can understand, to hear the unspoken, and to feel understood without explanation. As Maya Angelou beautifully stated, “I may not remember what you said, I may not remember what you did, but I will always remember how you made me feel.” That, indeed, is the true power of friendship. Liberache always made me feel good about myself. No matter the circumstance.

My friend Liberache was more than just a friend—he was a brother to me. His father, Mr. Frank Harris, would always take me home from football practices and games, no matter how late or how tired he was. Their love and support never failed.

Years later, I told Mr. Frank, I wished I could repay him for everything he had given me. He looked at me and said, “James, if you are living a good life, you have already paid me in full.”

I once asked Libby that same question, and he laughed and said, “Daddy and I were glad to help you—there is no charge.”

Pastor Lewis, thank you for honouring Liberace’s life with such elegance, strength, and compassion. His homegoing service was perfect, and it reflected who he truly was. Thank you. James Johnson
